

urbanspoon

Julian Medina, who was the chef at Zócalo on the Upper East Side, has opened a contemporary Mexican place with 80 seats on two levels. It will be decorated with tiles and craft items from Mexico, and it will have both a ceviche and guacamole bar as well as a wood-burning oven for casseroles and quesadillas. The name, pronounced tow-low-AH-chay, is that of a flower that some believe inspires passion.

Toloache
(212) 581-1818
Midtown West
251 W 50th St
New York, NY 10019